

---

Five Guantanamo detainees released, sent to Europe

---

21/11/2014

More specifically, four Yemeni men and one Tunisian had been cleared to leave Guantanamo since 2009, but their release was held up over instability and concern they would face torture or persecution upon returning. Three men will go to Georgia, and the remaining two to Slovakia. It is hoped the men will be given legal status, housing, rights to work, healthcare and access to education.

Since 2002, 500 Guantanamo detainees have been released, many to host countries. This is the first time since 2010 that any Yemenis have been released.

"We are very grateful to our partners for these generous humanitarian gestures," State Department envoy Cliff Sloan said in a statement to the Miami Herald. "We appreciate the strong support we are receiving from our friends and allies around the globe."

READ MORE: 'We crossed the line': US mea culpa at UN panel on use of torture

Abd Al Hakim Ghalib Ahmad Alhag, one of the four Yemenis – and a client of the Center for Constitutional Rights – was released on the eve of a new lawsuit seeking an end to his indefinite detention.

"We are grateful to the Republic of Georgia for offering our client a new home where he can begin to rebuild his life after more than a decade in Guantánamo without charge or trial," Franck C. Tazzano and John C. Snodgrass said in a statement released by CCR.

