
Nine U.S. Governors Request End of the Blockade

14/10/2015

Nine North American governors sent a letter to Congress leaders in Washington to request decisive steps to open the trade with Cuba and put an end to the blockade

"It's time the Congress acts to remove the sanctions that prevent trips and the normal trade between our nation and Cuba", reads the letter dated last October 9.

The governors highlight the development of the Cuban agricultural purchases starting from a legislation change in year 2000, but indicate that a "sustainable business relationship" cannot be limited to a single sector or involve only transactions in one way.

"Although agricultural companies can legally export to Cuba under the current legislation, the financial restrictions set by the blockade limit the capacity of North American companies to get inserted in the Cuban market".

Competitors like Canada, Brazil, and the European Union are not subject to those limitations, are occupying spaces of the North American potential, refers the document.

To put an end to the blockade will create works and new opportunities in the North American agricultural sector and will open a market of 11 million inhabitants only 90 miles away, it adds.

In addition, in the letter the exchange potentialities between the two peoples are highlighted since the end of the restrictions for tourist trips of North American citizens, a constitutional right that is limited at present to 12 categories like cultural, scientific, journalistic reasons and people-to-people contacts.

Dear Majority Leader McConnell, Senator Reid, Speaker Boehner, and Representative Pelosi:

As governors of states across the United States, we write to share our support for an end to current trade sanctions levied against Cuba. It is time for Congress to take action and remove the financial, travel, and other restrictions that impede normal commerce and trade between our nation and Cuba.

Since the Trade Sanctions Reform and Export Enhancement Act of 2000 (TSRA), which allowed for the first commercial sales of food and agricultural products from the U.S. in nearly half a century, Cuba has become an important market for many American agricultural commodities. Thus far, our country's agriculture sector has led the way in reestablishing meaningful commercial ties with Cuba, but a sustainable trade relationship cannot be limited to one sector or involve only one-way transactions.

Though U.S. food and agriculture companies can legally export to Cuba under current sanctions, financing restrictions imposed by the embargo limit the ability of U.S. companies to competitively serve the Cuban market. Our thriving food and agriculture sectors coupled with Cuba's need for an affordable and reliable food supply; provide opportunities for both our nations that could be seized with an end to the remaining trade restrictions. Foreign competitors such as Canada, Brazil, and the European Union are increasingly taking market share from U.S. industry, as these countries do not face the same restrictions on financing.

Ending the embargo will create jobs here at home, especially in rural America, and will create new opportunities for U.S. agriculture. Expanding trade with Cuba will further strengthen our nation's agriculture sector by opening a market of 11 million people just 90 miles from our shores, and continue to maintain the tremendous momentum of U.S. agricultural exports, which reached a record $152 billion in 2014.

Bi-lateral trade and travel among citizens of both nations will engender a more harmonious relationship between the U.S. and Cuba, while providing new opportunities for U.S. interests to benefit economically from improved relationships. The benefits of fully opening Cuba to free market trading with the U.S. go beyond dollars and cents. This positive change in relations between our nations will usher in a new era of cooperation that transcends business. Expanded diplomatic relations, corporate partnerships, trade and dialogue will put us in a better position to boost democratic ideals in Cuba. This goal has not been achieved with an outdated strategy of isolation and sanctions.

While normalized trade would represent a positive step for the U.S. and Cuban economies, we appreciate and support the Administration's executive actions taken thus far to expand opportunity in Cuba and facilitate dialogue among both nations. We now ask that you and your colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate take decisive steps to support U.S. commerce and trade relations and fully end the embargo on Cuba.

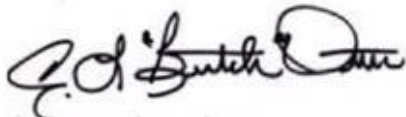

Sincerely,

Governor Robert Bentley
Alabama

Governor Edmund G. Brown
California

Governor C. L. Otter
Idaho

Governor Mark Dayton
Minnesota

Governor Steve Bullock
Montana

Governor Thomas Wolf
Pennsylvania

The politicians showed their support to the executive measures taken by President Barack Obama, but encouraged the members of the Chamber of Representatives and the Senate to act and put an end to the blockade.

The letter was signed by governors Terry McAuliffe (Virginia), Jay Inslee (Washington), Thomas Wolf (Pennsylvania), Steve Bullock (Montana), Mark Dayton (Minnesota), Butch Otter (Idaho), Robert Bentley (Alabama), Jerry Brown (California) and Peter Shumlin (Vermont).

Since the announcements of last December 17 that opened a new chapter in the Cuba-United States relationships, several North American state delegations have arrived to the country to explore business opportunities and have criticized the restrictions that still remain.
